TIP OF THE MONTH

Always get your customer to approve a sample that you are producing with the actual material for the job. Always do a step panel at the same time for your production team. You'll be able to QC your production before it's too late.

Keep these step panels in the dark once you're done with them; they will age less. If or when you need a step panel in 6 months or so, reading the instructions on the back of the step panel will guide you through each step. No interpretations, so no variables.

As soon as you use a gallon of color it's an automatic approval. By doing the methods mentioned previously, you will avoid extreme costs and frustration.

These are simple rules that should be implemented in your procedure. They cost a lot less then redoing a whole kitchen due to having the wrong color for instance... and no frustrations!

Happy finishing
